

the poem to music, with two strophes in each section. Motet settings of song texts are not unusual in the Bohemian repertoire from before the Battle of White Mountain. Usually, they quote the song melody continuously in one of the voices. In this case, however, the original melody is only recalled at the beginning of the work in the inner voices of the two choirs. Because the choirs are in different registers, there emerges a dialogue between a choir of higher and a choir of lower voices. All of the important messages are highlighted through musical rhetoric, whether the invective against the »mob of the bishops« or the apotheosis of Hus's martyrdom. This composition, in which there is a remarkable combination of the text's subject matter on the beginnings of Hussitism with a fine musical setting from the very end of the epoch preceding the Battle of White Mountain, represents a dignified conclusion to the two centuries of music associated with the Bohemian Reformation.

1. Svatý Václave

1. Svatý Václave, vývodo
české země, kněže náš,
pros za ny Boha,
svatého Ducha,
Cristeleyson.

2. Pomoci my tvé žádám, smiluj se nad námi,
utěš smutné, odveď vše zlé,
svatý Václave,
Cristeleyson.

3. Nebeské jest dvorstvo krásné, blaze jemu, ktož tam puojde, [v] život věčný, oheň jasný svatého Ducha,
Cristeleyson.

1. Saint Wenceslas, thou duke of the Czech Lands, our prince, pray for us to God,
to the Holy Spirit.
Christe eleison!

2. We seek thy help,
have mercy on us,
give comfort to the sorrowful, drive away all evil, Saint Wenceslas.
Christe eleison!

3. Heavenly are the lovely courts, happy is he who shall go there to eternal life, the brilliant fire of the Holy Spirit.
Christe eleison!

2. Philippus Cancellarius: *Veste nupciali

1. Veste nupciali
splendore figurali,
non tam corporali
quam habitu mentali,
nupcias introeas:
sic fulgeas,
ut sedeas
in sede speciali;
caveas,

1. V oděvu svatebním
obrazně se blyšticím,
ne tak ustrojením
tělesným, leč duchovním, nechť na svatbu přicházíš:
tak zazáříš,
že usadíš
se na prestolu zvláštním;
pozor slyš,

1. In a wedding garment
of symbolic brilliance,
not just of bodily,
but of mental garb,
may you enter the nuptial feast.
May you so shine
that you sit
in the seat of honour.
Beware
